

Wexford House demonstrates busy hands, minds

DENVER — Wexford House residents have been getting crafty with several functional projects, including necklaces and fall-themed door hangers.

"The joy of making something beautiful with nothing more than a piece of string and a washer is something that the residents really take pride in," said Tabatha Funderbunk, activities director for the senior living community.

"Many residents wear the necklaces themselves, but they also enjoy giving them to family and other residents as gifts for special occasions."

Activities such as these are about more than just about the crafts, Funderbunk said. "The sharing, listening and laughter that takes place is priceless."
